After upgrading to Lightroom 5.2 most of my problems with the previous version were solved. The 5.2 version is more stable. A lot of minor quirks are not there anymore. Lightroom 5.3 should be stable for me. I think a lot of new features are coming. And of course, there is a lot of work to be done from the developers. That's why it's just inevitable that there are some problems. I am very happy with the impression I got after installing Photoshop CS6, and I am thrilled that I could resist the invitation from Adobe to check out and review the beta version of Photoshop Lightroom 5.2. Thanks, Adobe! The last few days I have been testing Lightroom 5.2 with great interest. It's wise to test an upgrade anyway, but especially if you love Lightroom as much as I do. The biggest change in this Lightroom version is the new Smart Preview for RAW, JPEG. In the previous version of Lightroom I could not get it to work with my Fujifilm X-Trans cameras. The camera showed a huge small picture file extension. My guess is that the RAW file was just too large to include in previews. Other than that the previews worked just fine. It's also great that the previews can vary on the size of the preview almost instantly. In the previous version the preview size would never change. This meant managing several different size previews for every image. This took a lot of time and resulted in keeping an image open for a long time while the preview is outputting.
As far as the performance goes you have to understand again that the reviewers have not been able to test the full version of Lightroom 5.2. That's why they write such negative reviews.
